

蕭光頭文法文化班 第 18 課：《言所寓言》第一則（寫好寫滿版）

Once upon a time, in a land which is far, far away, there lived, among others, like rats, cats, and bats, a mouse.

At just about the same time, in a land that is not so far away from this land, there lived, among others, like cakes, crackers, and cameras, a cheese.

So there you have it: A mouse and a cheese.

Or, if you're into that whole "alphabetical order" thingy: A cheese and a mouse.

---

Anyway, one day, after Lord-knows-how-long of starvation, the mouse was hungry.

He looked, and searched, and failed and had... nothing to eat.

By the way, on that same day, after Lord-knows-how-long of meditation, the cheese was there.

It sat, and breathed, and aged and had... nowhere to go.

---

Suddenly, out of nowhere, the mouse saw the cheese.

Unfortunately, out of curiosity, the cheese saw the mouse.

Subsequently, out of logicity, they saw each other.

Ultimately, out of necessity, one ate the other.

---

And so we have it... A hungry mouse and an aging cheese lived happily ever after.

In fact, till this day, it remains a mystery in what exact fashion they managed to live happily in each other.

